To assess the learning levels of students; the Department of Philosophy organized a Topper's Talk so that students may have an inhouse discussion on how to get ready for their end semester examination. The aim of the Department was to bring the experienced achievers to show that if learning be done in a pattern which has already yielded results, then a learner; fast or slow will flourish. The Department aimed at making the students assess their own learning levels by being part of a discussion were proved patterns to be exam ready were made available to them. The outcome of the event was students interacted with the topper's so as to examine their pattern of being exam ready. It was hence clear to many that their efforts were falling short only because their practice may not be that rigorous or their writing may not be that apt. Students were thus able to judge their own learning levels
